Venomous Serpent of the Tropics.

There are eight varieties of him (the ferde-lance), the most common being the gray speckled with black, precisely the color that enables the monster to hide himself among the roots of the trees by simply coiling about them and concealing his triangular head, Some times he is a beautiful flower yellow; then he may never be distinguished from the bunch of bright bananas among which he hangs coiled; or he may be a dark yellow or a yellowish brown, or the color of wine lees speckled with pink and black, or a per fect ash tint, or black with a yellow belly or black with a rose belly—all bues of tropi-cal mould, of old bark, of putrefying trees, of forest detritus. The iris of the eye is orange, with red flashes; at night it glows like incandescent charcosl.

And the fer-de-lance reigns absolute king over the mountains and the ravines; he is lord of the forests and the solitudes by day, and by night he extends his dominion over public roads, the familiar paths, the parks, and pleasant resorts. People must remain at home after dark unless they dwell in the city itself; if you happen to be out visiting after sunset, only a mile from town, your friends will caution you anxiously not to follow the boulevard as you go back, and to keep as closely as possible to the very centre of the path. Even in the brightest noon you cannot venture to enter the woods unescorted; you cannot trust your eyes to de tect danger; at any moment a seeming branch, a knot of lianas, a pink or gray root, a clump of pendant yellow fruit, may suddenly take you, writhe, swell, stetch, spring, strike Then you will need aid indeed, and most quickly; for within the space of a few heart beats the stricken flesh chills, tumefies, softens, changes color, spots violaceously and an icy coldness crawle through all the blood. If the physician or the pauseur arrives in time and no artery or vein has been directly pierced there is hope; but the danger is not passed when the life has been saved. Necrosis of the tissues begins; the flesh corrupts, tatters, tumbles from the bone, and the colors of its putrefaction are frightful mockeries of the bues of vegetable death, of forest decomposition, the ghattly pinks and grays and yellows of rotting trunks and roots melting back into the thick fetid clay that gave them birth. You moulder as the trees moulder; you crumble and dissolve as dissolves the substance of the balatus and the palms and the accomats—the Death-of-the Woods bas seized upon

L. STABLER & CO., No More Mother Hubbards,-Mother Hubbard bathing robes are no longer fashionable. Miss Templeton, of Altoona, is authority for the statement. She prepared a gorgeous Mother Hubbard of scarlet flannel with white trimmings, and then started for Atlantic City on the seashore express. She arrived at the beach on Tuesday, and yesterday was chosen for its display. mountain maid and the Mother Hubbard appeared simultaneously on the beach. The regular crowd of mashers were on hand, and they voted that they liked the short-shirt style of dress better, but as this was Miss Templeton's first appearance of course she should have her own way. A young railroad manager escorted the lady to the water. There was a female shriek, just a little shriek, because the water was cool. The maid from the mountain waded out until the water reached her waist.
